

LandCam project: What land tomorrow for Cameroon ?

The laws that govern our land are 45 years old: that's older than 87% of the population! These rules are no longer adapted to today's society and conflicts over land are multiplying: that's why it is time to change them. The government has launched a reform process, and it is now or never for us, the citizens of Cameroon, to contribute to the reform! A new land law is an opportunity to better protect our interests, our rights and our diverse cultures.

What new land regime do we want for our country?

For us Cameroonians, we dream of:

1. A law that defends our traditional values and our multiple identities.
2. A law that recognises for communities the property of their traditional territories, by adopting the principle of “one village, one space”, and by recognising customary individual and collective land rights.
3. A law that guarantees our food security and enables us to develop sustainably.
4. A law that defends the land rights of all citizens, particularly those of women, youths and indigenous peoples.

What you can do

Have your say in the reform of the law, because your voice matters! You can:

- Join LandCam on Facebook and adhere to our vision by “liking” and sharing our Land Reform Policy Note.
- Give us your opinion: send us a message or a short video to explain why a fair land law is important to you.
- Read LandCam's research on what is at stake and what can be done to influence the reform on our website www.landcam.org, talk about it with people around you and share on social media.
- Follow our updates and take part in our future events.
